

STUDENT EXAMPLE
2nd Trimester Reflection

I am a critical thinker

When we did the pallet benches, we had to use critical thinking to know how much wood we needed for the actual bench, and how much wood for the footrest. We used the area of the pallet, then subtracted the area of the footrest. We used that data to then persuade the bench design. That measurement was a great example of critical thinking.

I am an effective communicator

When we do “What is it” there is a step called making meaning conference, and it is where you have to explain your thoughts on what the object is to another person. I could clearly explain my thoughts to another person and maybe persuade their thoughts about the object. This concept is an example of effective communication.

I have content mastery

I have content mastery when we go through each math unit. I learn how to do a different concept in math, and then apply it to real world problems. I learn different strategies on how to solve for these concepts, so that later in life these will become easy. Once they are easy, I can focus on more important concepts.

I am an engaged citizen

When we worked on the new table, I showed that I am an engaged citizen. I worked hard with the braces team to fully support the table. If it was not for us, the whole table would have failed. Every person had to engage themselves to the fullest to make the whole group work. One of those people was me, and I definitely worked my hardest.

I am self- directive, and take personal responsibility

I can lead a group to success, while also taking part in my responsibility. For example, with the pallet benches, I was one of the main leaders. I lead the team to a big success, while also accomplishing everything I needed to complete myself. Also, with the pencil problem, I never lose my pencil, but I always take a ration just in case I do lose one.
